Prelate Pledges Friendship Of Catholics

Declaring that a "staggering" number of people in America are racially and religiously prejudiced, Archbishop Richard J. Cushing of the Catholic Archdiocese, of Boston, said that no true Christian should support or participate in any such activity.

Speaking at the seventy-fifth anniversary convention of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, in Boston, he declared that religion was the hope of the world and attacked atheism along with Communism, Fascism and Nazism, which he characterized as the great threats to freedom.

He was the first Catholic Archbishop ever to speak before the organization.

Archbishop Cushing asserted that religion was the foundation stone of the independence which all free men claimed. "It underlies all our human dignity, our political democracy, our hopes for faith and freedom," he said.

Continuing, he declared:

"To the list of those who threaten freedom, of those who undermine the values which all hold dear, must be added not merely the Fascist, the Nazi, and the Communist but also the atheist."

Speaking officially for the Catholic Church, the Archbishop said:

"I can and do pledge to you the friendship of my people. There are many ignorant or malicious things sometimes said about our beliefs and their effect on the attitude of Christians towards Jews. I ask you not to believe those things; they are lies and they are uttered in order to divide us."

Dr. James G. Heller, rabbi of the Isaac M. Wise Temple of Cincinnati, in the principal address delivered at the annual banquet of the Union.

He said the suggestion was neither "fanciful nor fantastic," arguing that, in Judaism, "we must be on guard against the perpetuation of mere sectarianism, against regarding our alignments as based upon unchangeable distinctions, against magnifying inconsiderate things into sacred untouchable causes."

Four men cited as having given "long and outstanding service to the cause of liberal Judaism" were elected members of the executive board of the Union for life. They are Dr. Stephen S. Wise, of New York, president-emeritus of the Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion; Dr. Jonah B. Wise, of New York, son of the founder of the Union; Lee M. Friedman, of Boston, a former president of Temple Israel, of Boston; and Dr. Hiram B. Weiss, of Cincinnati, recently retired chairman of the board of governors of the Hebrew Union College.

Dr. Jonah B. Wise responded after receiving a citation in recognition of his many years of service to liberal Judaism.

Plan Closer Religious Ties With Israel

The initial step toward recognition of the Chief Rabbinate of Israel as the supreme religious authority for Jews has been taken by the Rabbinical Council of America, which says it represents between 2,000,000 and 3,000,000 Orthodox Jews in the United States and Canada.

This was announced in New York by Dr. Israel Tabak, president of the Council, at a conference at its office at 331 Madison Avenue. He hailed the establishment of close ties between American Jewish communities and the Chief Rabbinate as "epoch-making" and as a stabilizing factor in the interpretation of Judaism for American Jews.

Dr. Tabak said that "whereas this authority will be similar in some respect to the authority exercised in Rome upon the Catholic communities throughout the world, it does not envisage the creation of a hierarchy with power to appoint heads of synagogues outside of Palestine."

"Judaism is a religion of laws and not of men," he added, "and it is the authoritative interpretation of Jewish religious law contained in the Bible and the Talmud that will be handed down by a competent body of scholars associated with the Chief Rabbinate of the Holy Land. Religious authority centered in Israel would be analogous in Jewish religious law to the Supreme Court of the United States in civil law."

In the first step the 1,800 synagogues associated with the Council have made the first addition to their prayer books in 100 years in America by including a special prayer for the welfare of Israel and the Chief Rabbi of the rites of these synagogues, Dr. Tabak said.

Later, Dr. Tabak said, he will suggest a world conference of Jewish groups to be held in Jerusalem in an effort to stem the denominationalism of Judaism in the U.S.

The idea for closer religious ties was first suggested by Dr. Tabak last May at the annual convention of the Council. Following adoption of a resolution to this effect, Dr. Tabak expressed the desire in a letter to Dr. Herzog.

In answer to Dr. Tabak's letter, Dr. Herzog wrote:

"I welcome with deep spiritual joy the awakening that has arisen among you, rabbis of Israel in the United States, in the wake of the establishment of the State of Israel, to renew as of old the spiritual ties between scattered Jewish communities throughout the world and the holy city of Jerusalem, the city of the sanctuary, by the re-establishment in Israel of the supreme religious authority to be centered in Jerusalem."

Many American Jews, Dr. Tabak asserted, are now confused and perplexed when they stop to think of their relationship to the new

A.J.C. GOES OUT OF BUSINESS

The American Jewish Conference, organized in 1943 as the all-inclusive democratic national body of American Jews to deal with post-war Jewish problems, will cease to function as an organization on December 31, it was announced by Louis Lipsky, chairman of the Conference Executive Committee.

After a motion to continue the status quo of the conference had been defeated at a meeting of its interim committee on November 10, the committee, on a motion made by Mr. Lipsky, voted with only a few abstentions to end the activities of the conference at the end of the year.

The announcement added that a final committee, including Mr. Lipsky, had been appointed to wind up the affairs of the conference, "to dispose of all assets and discharge all liabilities, and to report to the executive committee not later than the last week in January."

Led In Oil Trade, Gave Art To Britain

Viscount Bearsted, chairman of the Shell Transport and Trading Company until two years ago, died in [illegible] Ireland.

[illegible] second Viscount and [illegible] family that for generations had taken part in Anglo-Jewish public life. He was one of the great personages in the world's oil trade, being a director in fifty-two companies including subsidiary and associated companies of the Shell Royal Dutch group.

Lord Bearsted was an art collector and benefactor of arts. He gave largely of his family's wealth to Jewish needy, and he and his family donated £90,000 (about $360,000), toward the first big appeal for German Jewry before the second World War.

Lord Bearsted married in 1908 Dorothea Montefiore Michells. They had three sons, of whom the eldest, Maj. Marcus Richard Samuel, succeeds to the family honors.

Lord Bearsted was a son of Sir Marcus Samuel, first Viscount Bearstead, who was once Lord Mayor of London and was for many years chairman of the Shell Transport and Trading Company, Ltd., which he founded. The son,

Jews Suffer Most From Egypt, Iraq

The Israeli Government in considering an appeal to the United Nations to relieve the plight of Jews in Arab countries at war with Israel.

Evidence has been accumulated at Tel Aviv to show that Arab States have instituted a number of discriminatory economic and social laws, many of them reminiscent of Hitler's Nuremberg decrees, and have fostered mob violence against their Jewish nationals since the proclamation of the Jewish State last May 14.

The evidence has been taken in part from what censorship has allowed to appear in the Arabic press. But mainly it has been assembled from private reports to the Government and from letters smuggled through censorship and forwarded to Israeli authorities. Egypt and Iraq were said to be the worst offenders.

The Israelis will insist, it was learned, that extortion of money and destruction of property by Egyptians and Iraqis be made a subject for the eventual peace negotiations. Room for all 200,000 Jews still in Arab countries will be found in Israel if they want to emigrate after war, Israeli authorities said.

The Arabs' treatment of their Jewish nationals was contrasted with the provisions for Arabs in Israel. Such curfew restrictions as have been imposed were necessitated by military security, it was said. Otherwise Arab and Jew in Israel have equal status and equal

Famous Rabbi Sees Jewish Centre Now In United States

Dr. Leo Baeck, famous former Chief Rabbi of Berlin, Germany, who arrived by air from London, declared in New York that the responsibility for religious leadership and guidance among the Jews of the world rested in the United States.

Dr. Baeck, who is to serve as the first visiting professor at the Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion in Cincinnati, emphasized both at La Guardia Field and later in an interview at the Sulgrave Hotel that the center of Jewish life and studies had shifted from Europe to America. He added that the task of American Jews included responsibility for Israel as well as for the Jews in all Europe.

Without the aid of the United Jewish Appeal, he said, the new state of Israel would have been impossible. In addition to needing material help, Jews in Europe and in other parts of the world are desperately in need of spiritual help and guidance, he said. Once that help came from those graduating from the European theological seminaries but today it must come from men educated in the United States, he explained.

Confidence in the United States' ability to fill the gap caused by the Nazi annihilation of the Jewish educational centers as well as of population was expressed by Dr. Baeck as he referred to a resurgence of religion among the Jewish people in the United States. He termed it "the great awakening" of American Jews.

Dr. Baeck, one of the foremost scholars in Europe and rabbi of the famous Oranienburger Str[illegible] of the state, after Hitler came to power in Germany, but he was held in such high regard by Jew and Christian alike, both in Germany and throughout the world, that the Nazis hesitated to harm him. In 1938, after the Nazis burned the synagogues, Dr. Baeck was offered the post of associate rabbi in a prominent Cincinnati temple, but he cabled back that "as long as there is a single humble Jew left alive in Germany, my place is here with him."

The late Dr. Joshua Loth Liebman, author of "Peace of Mind," who knew Dr. Baeck both before and after the war, described the arrest of Dr. Baeck as follows:

"One morning early in 1943 he had heard the grim five o'clock knock at the door of his home.

Union Of A.H.C. To Move To N.Y.

The Union of American Hebrew Congregations, founded seventy-five years ago in Cincinnati by the late Dr. Isaac M. Wise, voted in Boston, Mass., at its biennial assembly to move its national headquarters from that city to New York. A regional office will be maintained in Cincinnati.

The delegates voted also to table the recommendation of a special committee that the name of the organization be changed to "the Union of Liberal Synagogues." Vigorous debate preceded the vote on both proposals.

Among the proponents of the move to New York were Jacob Aronson, chairman of the union's executive board and vice-president of the New York Central Railroad; Dr. Jonah B. Wise, rabbi of Central Synagogue, New York City, son of the founder; and Dr. Abba Hillel Silver, of Cleveland.

Against the recommendation to bring the national headquarters to New York were Dr. James G. Heller, rabbi of the Isaac M. Wise Temple, Cincinnati; James Magrish, of Cincinnati; and Mrs. Arthur Hays Sulzberger, of New York, a granddaughter of the founder.

The speakers in favor of having the headquarters of the union in New York argued that it was proper that the largest and oldest Jewish religious organization in the United States, with almost 400 congregations and a membership of more than 500,000, should have its national offices on the Eastern seaboard, where more than 80 per cent of the Jewish population is located.

Leaders of the opposition group maintained that the union had grown steadily with headquarters in Cincinnati, and that this city,

Believes No Need For DP Camps By 1950

Dr. William Haber, adviser on Jewish affairs to the United States Army commanders in Germany and Austria, believes "there is little doubt that the Jewish displaced persons' problem has entered into the liquidation phase."

His interim report was released in Washington, D. C., by Secretary of the Army Kenneth C. Royall.

Dr. Haber said that Jewish displaced persons had been leaving the United States zone of Germany for Israel at the rate of about 4,000 a month. A total of about 15,000 have left the zone for that country since May 15, 1948.

"During my recent trip to Israel," said Dr. Haber, "I conferred with Israel's top immigration officials concerning the present immigration program and their plans. It is my impression that all the Jewish displaced persons who want to settle in Israel will have the opportunity to do so by September, 1949. Barring unforeseen international developments, the mass aspect of the Jewish displaced persons problem, in so far as Israel is concerned, should come to an end by fall of next year.

"By then only those who are waiting for migration to the United States and countries other than Israel, and those who, by reason of illness or physical disabilities, are ineligible for immigration to any country, will remain."

Dr. Haber is on leave from the University of Michigan, where he is a professor of economics. He entered upon his present duties in January. At that time the official Jewish displaced persons population was 250,000 for the United States zone of Germany and [illegible] figures have narrow to 169,000 and 17,000, respectively.

Dr. Haber reported that the formation of the State of Israel, its

Claims U.S.-British Policy Is Shoddy

A policy of "shoddy expediency" on the part of the United States and Great Britain is responsible for the crisis in Palestine, Sumner Welles, former U.S. Under Secretary of State, charged in a speech in New York. He accused the two nations of "tortuous manoeuvering" and "disregard . . . for the principles they professed."

Mr. Welles was a guest of honor at a dinner of the Business and Professional Associates of the American Jewish Congress. He was presented with a citation "in recognition of his statesmanship and understanding, inspiringly devoted to the service of his country and in gratitude for his courageous championing of the cause of Israel among the nations of the world."

"Can any one maintain," he asked, "that American interests would not be better safeguarded than they are at present if this government at once refused to submit further to Mr. Bevin's leadership on Palestine; urged the United Nations to return to the plan provided by the original General Assembly resolution; extended immediate de jure recognition to Israel and recommended similar action to the other members of the U. N. and, finally to extend such financial and economic cooperation to Israel as would help the Israeli people to succeed more readily in overcoming the appalling obstacles with which they are faced?"

Scoring "the self-styled realists who have been deciding our policy," Mr. Welles called upon th[illegible] [illegible] said that no further efforts should be made to reduce the territory which the Israelis "have so rightly declared to be an irreducible minimum."

Congratulations to Jack R. Bogante, K.C.

The Directors of the Hebrew Consumptive Aid Association of Canada and the Jewish Hospital of Hope are proud and delighted to have the opportunity of congratulating the inspiring, conscientious and able president of these organizations, Jack R. Bogante, on the popular and well-merited recognition he has received from the Province of Quebec in being created a King's Counsel. He has earned the respect and admiration of countless people for his initiative and the great capacity he has shown in his wise and successful leadership. He has been president of the Hebrew Consumptive Aid Association for fifteen years and the indomitable leader in bringing to a successful fruition years of efforts and planning in having the Jewish Hospital of Hope built. The hospital, the only institution of its kind in Canada, is a permanent, hard-earned and most deserved testimonial and tribute to his years of unselfish and unstinted work on behalf of the less fortunate members of our community. No one in our community has accomplished so much for its welfare as has our esteemed and beloved president, Jack R. Bogante, K.C. It is a source of heartfelt pleasure that his great worth and ability have received recognition in his legal profession, where he enjoys an active practice. It is our fervent hope that he, his wife (who in her own right has done so much for the hospital) and their children shall be blessed with many years of health and happiness and may he continue his noble humanitarian work. God bless him.

THE TEACHER'S JOB

Address To The Ohio-Michigan-Indiana Jewish Religious School Teachers Association

By Dorothy F. Zeligs

It used to be a comparatively simple thing for a teacher to evaluate his task. It meant that he spent some time with the curriculum or textbook which he was going to teach and mastered its contents to a greater or less degree. The teacher today who really looks at his job sees it as a complex and challenging undertaking. That is why his first responsibility is to view it with an awareness of its many facets.

The teacher's job may be analyzed along the lines of three major elements: (1) Understanding the child as a total personality; (2) interpreting the curriculum; (3) guiding in the learning process. Although these three elements are closely inter-related, let us consider them separately for the purpose of this study.

When a teacher walks into a classroom at the beginning of a semester and sees a group of unknown children, how is he prone to regard them? Does he see them only as a group, to whom he plans to impart a given amount of subject-matter? This attitude is still prevalent in our schools to a large degree. The skilled teacher who looks at his job with intelligence and understanding sees the children before him as personalities. Since each one is a unique individual, the first responsibility of the teacher is to get acquainted with the members of his group. In order to do so, he must establish a relationship with them. This happens in any case, whether the teacher is aware of it or not. From the moment he opens the door, from the very first word he speaks, the relationship, whether positive or negative, has begun. The wise teacher plans that it shall take place along constructive lines.

It is [illegible] that one with a much greater natural aptitude than others for establishing good rapport with children. Such adults have in some way kept open a bridge to childhood so that children do not seem to them as creatures from another world. For this reason it is sometimes said that teachers are born, not made. However, the factors that enter into a good relationship can be consciously learned and applied. Through our ever-widening knowledge of the psychology of personality and the laws of learning, the well-trained teacher can approach his task with ever-increasing confidence.

What is the ideal relationship between a teacher and his pupils? Is it one in which the teacher meets the children entirely on their level and becomes "one of the fellows"? In the early history of progressive education, many teachers made the error of thinking so. Children, however, are stern realists in spite of their capacity for imaginative thinking. An adult can be a good friend, a good leader, a good companion, but he can never be other than a grown-up. If he tries not to be, he loses esteem with those who look to him for leadership and guidance.

In an attempt to be democratic, some teachers and parents ask children to make decisions which rightly belong to the adult. The following little incident is an example. A mother was talking to her three-and-a-half-year old, who had been home from nursery school because of a cold.

"Are you feeling all right today, Joey?" "Yes, Mommy." "Do you want to go to school?" "Yes, Mommy." "But Joey, do you think you ought to go to school?" "I don't know, Mommy. I'm not a doctor; I'm just a little boy."

The ideal relationship between a teacher and his pupil is based largely upon the teacher's awareness of the child as a personality, his respect for him as a thinking, feeling human being. It is the same democratic approach that a person of good-will has to all people, whether adults or children. It is highly different from the authoritarian rule of the teacher in the old-fashioned classroom, which can be rightly compared to the fascist approach. The ideal democratic relationship referred to above is not inconsistent with rightful authority and the power to give direction when necessary.

The nature of the relationship between teacher and children is the most important single aspect in the teaching situation. What the teacher is as a human being, as well as what he teaches, will affect that relationship. Psychologists have proven that desirable learning can take place only in an atmosphere where there is some degree of positive feeling between teacher and pupil.

The specific job of the Jewish school is with the Jewish child in the world of today. It is important to understand the child, not only as an individual, but in his relatedness. We must see him against the background of his family, his neighborhood, his public school experience. It is necessary to understand the impacts of the environment upon the total personality of the child.

There is particular need for the religious school to avoid conflict with the home. This does not mean that the school should not seek to develop better attitudes towards Jewish life in a child who comes from a home that is somewhat negative in its Jewish attitudes. Often a child brings Judaism from the school into the home and influences parental attitudes along desirable lines. But where the gulf is too great between the home and the school, a child may be thrown into a state of serious conflict.

One may wonder how such a situation can arise when parents themselves choose the school to which they send their children. Some parents send their children to a Jewish school not from a [illegible]use, but for reasons quite different. The action may be prompted by a sense of guilt on the part of the parent, or because the child's friends go to a Jewish school, or because it is considered the proper thing to do in certain neighborhoods.

An incident which occurred in a suburban community near New York City is indicative of the turmoil such conflicts can create. One Sunday morning a child in one of the intermediate grades went into a tantrum, lying on the floor and screaming. When the startled teacher finally was able to find out what the trouble was, she learned the following facts:

The child had been given a large Christmas tree and numerous ornaments with which to decorate it. But that morning was the only time he could have had to trim the tree, since he had a football game scheduled for the afternoon. His mother, however, forced the child to go to Sunday school as usual.

The teacher said she would let him go home early enough to enable him to trim the tree. She felt that to do otherwise would hardly have increased his positive attitude towards a Jewish school. Whether or not one may agree with her handling of the situation, the fact remains that the inconsistencies in that home revealed a gulf between the home and school too great for this particular child to bridge.

It is a well-known fact that one of the serious problems in Jewish life today is that of the emotionally maladjusted Jew. There is a tendency among children in particular, to hide their hurt from their parents if they have been discriminated against as Jews, or if they are suffering inferiority feelings in this respect. This fact was brought out clearly when the parents of a certain group of children in a suburban community declared in a discussion group, that their youngsters had never suffered either from such experiences or from such feelings. A member of the school staff interviewed the children of grades one and two [illegible] a very carefu[illegible]sion. Because there was a good rapport of long standing between the leader and the group, the children soon dropped their protective secretiveness and revealed their innermost feelings to a degree that was profoundly moving. In answer to the question, "Tell me about some time when you especially remembered that you were Jewish," some of the responses were:

"When you're in trouble — like when someone calls you names. Some boy called me 'fat Jew.' I'm not fat." "My brother got in a

How A U.S. Ambassador Saved A Future Prime Minister

The story of how a man who is now the prime minister of his country was snatched from the gallows by a U.S. Ambassador was revealed for the first time with the release of a letter received by former U.S. Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, Jr., now General Chairman of the $250,000,000 United Jewish Appeal. The letter, written by Premier David Ben Gurion of Israel, said that the visit to Israel by Mr. Morgenthau recalled to his mind an incident in the summer of 1914, when the intervention of the late Henry Morgenthau, Sr., then U.S. Ambassador to Turkey, saved Ben Gurion and a young friend from execution as "Zionist adherents."

The Israeli Prime Minister disclosed that he and a young friend, who were in Palestine on vacation from the Turkish University at Constantinople (Istanbul), were arrested in the summer of 1914, after Turkey joined the Central Powers, on charges of "Zionist activity," which had been declared a capital offense. Threatened with execution, they secured the aid of Ambassador Morgenthau, who prevailed upon the Turkish authorities to expel the two youths, rather than hang them. Mr. Ben Gurion and his companion were deported to Egypt, where they were jailed by the local authorities.

Again Mr. Morgenthau intervened and secured their release. Through his efforts, they were enabled to come to the United States, where the now Premier lived for three years. He returned to Palestine in 1918 as a volunteer in a Jewish force serving with the British Army against the Turks. At the same time that he aided Mr. Ben Gurion, the Ambassador also intervened for other Turkish and Palestinian Jews, who were threatened with death, and many of whom had already been jailed. [illegible] Turkey, as Mr. Ben Gurion recalls in his letter, the Jews of Palestine were cut off from their contacts in the Allied nations and were threatened with hunger and destruction. Ambassador Morgenthau came to their aid, securing shipments of food contributed by American Jewry, the Premier writes:

"At the beginning of the first World War there were about 90,000 Jews in the country. Their economical and political situation was endangered when Turkey entered the war. Turkey was then ruled by a triumvirate: Anwar Pasha, Talaat Bey and Jamal Pasha. The latter was appointed Dictator of Syria and Palestine and Commander of the military forces intended for the occupation of Egypt. He immediately started the persecution of the Syrian and Jewish leaders, considering them a danger to the integrity of the Ottoman Empire. In Beirut a number of Arab leaders were hanged and Jewish leaders would have shared their fate, had it not been for the intervention of the American Ambassador in Constantinople, Mr. Henry Morgenthau, senior.

"An order was published by Jamal Pasha to the effect that any person on whom a "Keren Kayemet" stamp was found, would be subject to the death penalty, and every Zionist was declared an "enemy of the State." However, Ambassador Morgenthau's strong personal intervention stayed the Turkish dictator's hand.

"My friend J. Ben-Zvi and myself were the first to be imprisoned in Jerusalem (we were both students at the Turkish University, Constantinople, and came to spend our vacation at home in Jerusalem) but thanks to Morgenthau's intervention we were merely "expelled forever" from Palestine and Turkey instead of being hanged.

"At the beginning of 1915 we were put on a boat going to Egypt, and upon arrival in Alexandria were immediately sent to prison by the Egyptian authorities (in fact the English) as enemy subjects. Again through the intervention of Ambassador Morgenthau who applied to the American Consul in Alexandria in the matter, we were set free and permitted to go to the United States where we remained for three years, until we were able to return to Palestine, volunteering with the British Army in special Jewish regiments.

"The lives of other Jewish leaders, such as Mr. Dizengoff, Anteli, etc., who had been jailed by Jamal Pasha were saved as a result of the intervention of Ambassador Morgenthau. Instead of being put to death they were exiled to Turkey.

"At that time the situation of the Jews in Palestine also became [illegible] from the economical point of view. With the entry of Turkey into the war, the country was cut off from the world and left a prey to hunger and destruction. And again it was Ambassador Morgenthau, who, with the help and assistance of American Jewry had food sent directly to Palestine from America (which remained on neutral terms with Turkey even after entering the war in 1917). Thus Morgenthau senior, although a non-Zionist, saved the Jews of Palestine from hunger and the Jewish leaders from the gallows.

"In 1915-16 when I was in the United States, I had the opportunity of thanking Mr. Morgenthau in New York (after his return from Constantinople) on behalf of the Palestine Jews for what he had done for them, and I am very happy indeed to be able to tell all this now to his son, Mr. Morgenthau, Junior."

SUPPLIES AND MACHINERY GO TO ISRAEL

Over $125,000 worth of food, clothing, medical supplies and machinery were shipped from New York in the last few months to Israel by the Hapoel Hamizrachi Overseas Relief Committee. Industrial and agricultural machinery were included. Among the items sent as a gift from the organization to one of the Religious Workers' Colonies in Israel, Tirat Zvi, were: an electric generator, machinery for a wurst factory, a seed-transplanter, an electric sewing machine, an electric breadslicer, electric fans, a microscope. This equipment will help the colony establish itself on a firm economic basis and will enable it to absorb many of the new immigrants.

Dr. H. Raphael Gold, national president of Hapoel Hamizrachi (the religious Labor Zionist organization), stated that during the next three months a concentrated effort will be made to obtain and ship industrial and agricultural machinery to help meet the needs of the 42 colonies and cooperatives of the Religious Labor movement in Israel.

U.S. Hadassah Budget Is Increased

Mrs. Samuel W. Halprin, of New York, was unanimously re-elected national president of Hadassah, women's Zionist organization of America, at the thirty-fourth annual convention at Atlantic City, N.J.

A last-minute increase of $600,000 was voted by more than 3,000 women from Hadassah chapters in forty-seven states for the $5,935,000 budget recommended by the national board. Of the added funds, $500,000 will be spent to speed the opening of the first undergraduate medical school for the State of [illegible] Jerusalem next May 15. The remaining $100,000 will go to the Youth Aliyah movement for expansion of immigrant work.

The appointment of Mrs. Gershon Agronsky, of Jerusalem, to succeed the late Dr. Judah L. Magnes as chairman of the Hadassah Council in Palestine was announced.

Mrs. Elliot F. Glassberg, of New Rochelle, N.Y., was re-elected national secretary. She presided at the final session with Mrs. Herman Shulman of New York, who will go to Israel to serve as liaison between the national board in the United States and the Hadassah Council in Jerusalem.

Miss Juliet N. Benjamin, of New York, national fund-raising coordinator, explained that the budget of $6,835,000 for the next year would provide $3,000,000 for the Hadassah medical program in Israel, Housing and education of child [illegible] $2,100,000.

A grant of $700,000 was made to the Jewish National Fund for the purchase and improvement on land in the new state. The Hadassah child welfare and vocational education program will get $600,000. The organization also will spend $135,000 to establish a cultural understanding between young Zionists in Israel and America.

Mrs. Alexander M. Dushkin and Mrs. Benjamin Gottesman, of New York, will serve again as vice-presidents of Hadassah. Four new vice-presidents elected were Mrs. Julian Ansell, of Boston; Mrs. David Halpern, of Eugene, Ore.; Mrs. Siegried Kramarsky, of New York; and Mrs. James H. Olshan, of Chicago.

Mrs. Abraham Tulin was retained as national treasurer and Mrs. Nathan D. Perlman, also of New York, was re-elected recording secretary.

Honorary vice-presidents named to stay on in their posts were M[illegible] Moses P. Epstein, Mrs. Jacobs, Mrs. Irma [illegible] David de Sola [illegible]

[illegible] Ruth Gruber, of The New York Herald Tribune, told the delegates a special rehabilitation program would be needed in Israel for 12,000 refugees now awaiting passage to the new state from Cyprus.

In a report of her recent tour through the Middle East, she said that the Israelis had won the war in Palestine with help sent from the United States, their own ingenious weapons, and because they had no alternative.

fight and the other guy said, 'Dirty Jew'." "My friends made fun of me; one of them told the others that I was Jewish and I didn't have any more friends in the whole neighborhood." "My friend liked me. She said, 'You should be in my church; you're too good for them'." "Our neighbors like us even though we're Jews." "My mommy told me not to play with our neighbors who call us names; they're bad." "When we moved into a new neighborhood, the girl next door said, 'I can't play with you until you tell me what your last name is'."

The positive responses about when they especially remembered being Jewish were very few. They were as follows:

"I like Hanukkah and Purim." "There are a lot of holidays." "There are two Christmasses—the regular one and Hanukkah." "On Hanukkah we get a different present every night; it's very thrilling."

A large number of children admitted that it did not really matter to them whether they were Jewish or not. Several said outright that they didn't like being Jewish. One child declared that her parents were not Jewish, although the leader knew that they were. The child was indulging in wishful thinking. One youngster remarked philosophically, "It doesn't matter much what you are as long as you're alive."

Though much has been written about the psychopathology in Jewish life today, this knowledge is often not handled realistically in Jewish schools. It often happens that the teacher is so intensively Jewish in his interests and activities that he is entirely unaware of the conflicts present in his pupils. On the opposite side, the teacher himself may be so superficial in his own feelings of Jewishness that he cannot convey a more positive, more deeply satisfying attitude to his pupils.

The Jewish school today needs to face the fact that one of its most important aims must be along therapeutic lines. This need not be regarded as a negative approach, for the same sound educational procedures which are desirable for the healthy child also help those less emotionally sound. But it is only through an understanding of what is going on within the child, through an approach to him as a total personality, that the teacher can reach him at those levels where changes can take place. And it is only such changes that can properly be called education. Once the teacher accepts this fact and acts upon it, his approach to children, to the curriculum, and to the learning process will be determined by this understanding.

The construction of the curriculum is largely the job of specialists in this field, although teachers rightly have an increasing share in this activity. But the task of interpreting the curriculum to the children is solely the responsibility of the teacher.

The teacher in the Jewish school not only needs an understanding of the child in order to translate the curriculum in terms of the child's needs; he must also have the conviction that what he is going to teach that child is important. This implies an appreciation of Jewish cultural values for the individual in the modern world. It means that the teacher is aware of the importance of Jewish ties to give the necessary sense of inner security and of relatedness to the world. It means that the teacher must have a strong positive attitude to Jewish life and know from personal experience the enrichment that it offers.

The teacher who looks at his job sees the curriculum in terms of what it can mean to the total personality of the child. He selects from it materials which can be made meaningful to the group with which he is working. The curriculum, to be significant, needs to be related, to the children's lives in terms of interests, needs, application.

One prevailing lament among Jewish educators today is that Jewish culture is so remote from the real lives of the children. This gap, however, can be much more successfully bridged if children's interest are aroused by interpreting the curriculum in terms of meaningful activities. Another common source of perplexity among Jewish educators is how to telescope four thousand years of Jewish culture into the few years that the average child attends a Jewish school. But this is truly being overcome by "an embarrassment of riches."

This vast field of the Jewish past offers much from which to select materials that can appeal to the interests of children and give them a sense of their rich heritage. Unfortunately, the old procedure of foisting large masses of stereotyped, unselected material upon children is still carried out in many schools. Many teachers still see the curriculum as a body of subject-matter to be injected, as it were, into the children, who receive it in a passive fashion.

A few words might be said here about the history curriculum in particular since that subject occupies a major place in most Sunday schools. The teacher's own attitude to history will determine how meaningful he can make it to his pupils. Does he see it as a force that is dynamic and alive, helping to mold the present, and indicating trends for the future? Does he view history as a creative force, the making of which is to some degree within our own hands?

The wider view of history as embodying the entire life of man rather than a fragmentary and arbitrary selection from certain aspects of living, is gaining ground in general education. Its influence in the Jewish schools is also increasing to an encouraging degree. History is being taught in many schools as a way of life in the past. It is made more concrete and meaningful by clothing it in the garments of its own civilization.

In the study of American history, children could hardly visualize Puritans and Pilgrims without thinking of their characteristic dress, or of Indians without feather, and paint, or the colonial period without the powdered wigs and hoop-skirts, or the westward movement without the covered wagon. Personalities, events, ideologies, are inseparable from the concrete expressions of the civilization of which they were a part. To teach one without the other is like trying to separate form from content in a work of art. For children, particularly, these outer forms are meaningful vessels in which abstract ideas can be embodied and made meaningful.

In brief we need to emphasize three salient points that should be helpful in the interpretation of the curriculum: understanding the child as a total personality; a more creative approach to the fields of Jewish culture; and especially in the treatment of history, a wider view and a more concrete presentation.

A third aspect of the teacher's job is guiding the learning process.

Teaching is a skilled profession. There is no formula that can take the place of trained and experienced teachers. Any hope to the contrary is only wishful thinking and must inevitably lead to a waste of effort. Because of the dearth of trained teachers in the Jewish field, leaders have indulged to a large degree in a frantic search for a magic formula which would solve their problems.

During the past years, various "systems" have become popular for a time in Jewish Sunday schools. Among these attempts at magic formulas were the "cycle-plan" of teaching history, "the laboratory method," and some misdirected efforts along the philosophy of progressive education. Among the latter was a kind of activity program which consisted of devoting an entire year to elaborate construction of important buildings, such as the Temple, for example. Such a "blueprint" project is more suited to a class in carpentry.

But though there is no magic formula to take the place of the varied approaches and many techniques that a skilled teacher employs, there are sound principles of learning that can be helpful to all teachers. The first of these is the fact that learning takes place within the learner. All the teacher can do is to create a situation in which the pupil is stimulated to learn, in which he wishes to learn. This means that interest must be awakened. And interest is followed by effort. This philosophy of John Dewey, so well developed in his little book, Interest and Effort in Education, is certainly not a new idea. But its application is a con-

The Courtship Of Bar Tula

By Norman M. Cohen

Aroun Bar Tula and Nuri Bar Sira were born on almost the same day in houses that practically adjoined. For the first few years of their lives they played happily together in the village street, but at three years old both entered the village school and for the first time they discovered themselves not quite of the same mind. From the first, Aroun loved school and equally quickly Nuri had discovered that he had no wish to be a scholar.

Aroun learnt the Aleph Beth in half an hour, while Nuri was still mixing up his letters, after a fortnight. At five, Aroun knew the Pentateuch by heart, Nuri was still translating the story of Abraham. At the age of eight, Aroun knew the Mishna better than his teacher, at twelve he had worked through the whole of the Oral Law. At the same age, Nuri had been finally expelled from school. Neither bullying nor cajolery had made the slightest impression on him. He was kind, considerate and energetic, but he had absolutely no head for study. He was on the lowest rung of the social scale—an 'Am Haaretz, an ignoramus; while Aroun was rapidly gaining the fairest title in Jewish life, that of the scholar, the Talmid Haham.

Even so, some of their childhood friendship lingered on. Aroun, even though his mind was generally occupied with points of law and interpretation, was always ready to spare a few words for Nuri, while Nuri, whose lack of learning brought him no better occupation than that of an ostler in a caravanserai, worshipped Aroun in a somewhat inarticulate fashion and would gladly have died to help his brilliant friend.

Aroun's fame soon spread and there was much speculation about his future. It was confidently expected that some wealthy merchant would take him into his house as a son-in-law, thus allowing him to continue his studies undisturbed by material wants, while his father-in-law would enjoy all the prestige arising from the possession of so brilliant a scholar in the family.

So, indeed, it proved. One day the wealthy Mar Katran appeared in the village. He brought with him a learned Rabbi from his own town and the two of them listened from behind an open door while Aroun expounded a difficult passage of Talmud to his classmates. Mar Katran had not the vaguest idea of what it was all about, but the Rabbi professed himself delighted with Aroun's learning. Mar Katran obediently echoed the Rabbi's opinion and without any delay called on Aroun's parents.

Aroun was now nearly fourteen and his parents had begun to feel great concern over his future. They were overwhelmed with delight at the prospect of an alliance with so affluent a family and soon the whole village was buzzing with the news that Aroun was to marry Shoshana, Mar Katran's younger daughter. Nobody, however, had the least idea what Shoshana was like, but the size of her dowry was considered a great recommendation. Least concerned of all was Aroun, whose studies had inculcated a severely functional conception of matrimony.

Nuri, on the other hand, was passionately interested. His conversations with the travellers at the caravanserai had given him ideas very different from those Aroun had acquired from his books and he was impatient to see Shoshana. The next time that he met Aroun he congratulated him warmly on the great news. Aroun thanked him in rather distant fashion, for his mind was occupied with a difficult passage in the tractate of Sanhedrin.

"When is the betrothal to take place?" asked Nuri.

"Next week, on the second day," replied Aroun.

"Will Mar Katran be bringing Shoshana here?"

"Oh, no, I am riding to his home at Garlatta."

That was enough for Nuri. Early on the second day of the following week, he left the hay pallet that served as his bed; and, although he could ill afford to lose a day's wages, he set out directly for Garlatta. The sun was high and Nuri was eating his few crusts of bread when Aroun rode past on his way to the betrothal. Nuri hid himself behind a clump of bushes so that Aroun should not know he was being followed, but the precaution was unnecessary. Aroun was deep in thought, trying to reconcile two apparently contradictory rulings on the subject of the Second Tithe.

At Garlatta, Mar Katron's house was crowded with guests. Aroun was bewildered by the bustle and embarrassed by the sight of so many young girls. He begged to be allowed to borrow a scroll of the Mishna from Mar Katran's library and applied himself diligently to his reading in a secluded part of the house. But he could not be allowed to remain alone indefinitely and he was soon summoned to take part in the betrothal ceremony.

"Here is your betrothed," announced Mar Katran.

Aroun cast his eyes downwards, but he was conscious of a girl's form at his side. A feeling of joy and excitement ran through his body; he had never experienced such a feeling before and instinctively he recognized it as illicit.

"And with what are you going to betroth my daughter?" demanded Mar Katran.

Aroun pulled from his pocket a pretty ornamented bracelet that his mother had presented to him. Shoshana raised her hand so that he could slip the bracelet on her arm. Aroun had a momentary glimpse of a delicate, white hand, with one faint vein showing through the smooth, clear skin. He hastily put on the bracelet, turning his eyes away as he declared, "Behold, thou art betrothed to me by this bracelet." Immediately afterwards he fled away to his scroll.

His conduct was considered rather strange, but his fine bearing and handsome features won general approval and all the young girls were of the opinion that Shoshana would soon alter him after they were married. Nobody had noticed Nuri peering through the window during the ceremony—Nuri, almost wild with delight at Shoshana's appearance, her dark, gleaming eyes, her beautifully moulded figure, her slender ankles and her graceful walk; Nuri, who arrived back in the early hours of the morning, footsore but happy; Nuri, who fell asleep dreaming of Shoshana and how wonderful a bride she would make for Aroun, while Aroun — Aroun could not sleep at all, because of a textual difficulty he had discovered in the Mishna at Mar Katran's.

Six months later, Beruchah returned to her father's house. She was Mar Katran's elder daughter and thoroughly detestable by any standards. She had been hastily married off to a travelling merchant, who had spent a brief, but ever regretted stay in Garlatta. He had made a desperate effort to endure her displays of temper, mulishness and [illegible]. In the end, when the attempt had driven him to the verge of madness, he had plucked up courage to divorce her and returned her to her father. Mar Katran received her with anything but delight, especially when she made it clear that she immediately expected a second husband. But her status as a divorcee, coupled with her well-known faults of character, made every young man averse from espousing her. Faced with the prospect of remaining unwed, Beruchah decided on a small stratagem that appeared likely to bring her once more to a state of nuptial bliss.

It was generally agreed that Aroun had not once looked on Shoshana's face during the betrothal. [illegible] would be doing better for himself in marrying an elder daughter and a simple chit like Shoshana could soon be consoled with somebody else. After all, there was Biblical precedent for this harmless subterfuge and everybody knew that Leah had borne more children for Jacob than had Rachel. Mar Katran needed little persuading; he was only too anxious to rid himself of his elder daughter. Shoshana made little protest in public, for she stood in awe of Beruchah's temper, but she wept bitterly in private for the young scholar who was to be so wickedly defrauded.

Just a year from the day of the betrothal, the wedding party set out from Garlatta to Aroun's village. Gay and glittering was the procession. Musicians played before it; sages stopped their studies to see it pass; children threw flowers and the women left their labours to call down a blessing on the bride. Beruchah, heavily veiled, rejoiced immoderately at the occasion, caring little for Shoshana, who had been bidden to keep herself inconspicuous and who was riding in a waggon with the menials.

The wedding canopy was erected and Aroun, ornately dressed, but worried slightly by a difficult Baraita in the tractate of Baba Bathra, stood beneath it, awaiting the arrival of his bride. She came, Aroun did not look directly at her, but he noticed a slight feeling of depression in himself as she joined him and recalled how differently he had felt at the betrothal. He quickly dismissed this line of thought in favour of the Baraita and the Hazzan began the ceremony.

Nuri was in desperate straits. That plump, heavy figure, those thick ankles, that ungainly waddle —this was not the girl whom Aroun

JEWS OF CANADA AND U.S. REBUILD 800 COMMUNITIES THROUGH JDC

Monroe Goldwater, head of the reconstruction division of the Joint Distribution Committee, major American agency aiding distressed Jews abroad, emphasized in Chicago, Ill., the immediate need for an expanded program of re-[illegible] in behalf of "tens of thousands" of the neglected Jews in Eastern Europe who have become "economically displaced" because of nationalization of industry in that area.

Opening the thirty-fourth annual conference of the committee, Mr. Goldwater declared that 1,000,000 Jews would still remain in Europe in 1949, and that an expanded rehabilitation program must put particular emphasis on the Jews in Eastern Europe.

Reporting to the board of directors at a special session, he asserted that the agency had been unable to help 40,000 economically displaced Jews in Rumania to take up new livelihoods, and several thousands others in Hungary, for lack of funds. Mr. Goldwater stressed that these found themselves in a new economic environment which makes it difficult for them to continue in their former commercial and other economic pursuits.

These "thousands of Jews in Eastern Europe," Mr. Goldwater said, "have found it difficult to continue their former commercial pursuits as small merchants, tradesmen, jobbers and wholesalers." To help fit them into the new economic pattern, he added, "JDC must increase selective vocational training which will enable them to become self-sustaining members of their countries' society." Training must be accelerated in mechanics, industrial trades, transportation and related productive fields, he explained.

As head of a group of experts who direct the agency's efforts to help Europe's surviving Jews to be self-supporting, Mr. Goldwater said that because of accelerated emigration, particularly to Israel, the problem of providing economic reconstruction measures in behalf of Jewish DP's in Germany, Austria and Italy was "solving itself." The Jewish people of western Europe are making "excellent progress" toward economic recovery, he added.

For 1948, he reported, the committee has helped 120,000 persons become entirely or partially self-maintaining.

The reconstruction program includes the establishment of loan funds, the support of vocational training projects conducted by the Organization for Rehabilitation Through Training, the setting up of [illegible] cooperative and work projects. The committee receives its funds from the United Jewish Appeal campaign for $250,000,000, Canadian Jews contributing through the Congress and the Combined Jewish Appeal.

Meanwhile, Moses A. Leavitt, executive vice-chairman of the distribution committee, declared that "the emergency phase of JDC's relief work is now completed." He said that more than 220,000,000 pounds of supplies, food, clothing, medicines, tools, religious and cultural articles, had been sent to Europe's surviving Jews by the committee since V-E Day.

"Since the end of the war," he continued, "when it appeared that Jewish life abroad was completely shattered, JDC has been instrumental in rebuilding 800 Jewish communities across the Continent. To help achieve this remarkable feat, JDC now operates 382 children's homes and institutions and 525 hospitals, clinics, sanatoria and dispensaries. In addition, 85,000 Jews attend school under the JDC educational system in Europe; 440 synagogues and other religious institutions have been restored."

DP Have Skills To Enrich Countries In Practical Terms

By Louis Waltusky, Of New York, Secretary, Executive Committee, World ORT Union

The following appeared as a letter to the New York Times:

I directed the vocational training operations of World ORT Union in the Jewish DP camps in Germany and Austria, and I lived in intimate professional and social contact with Jewish DP's. In the course of my work I spoke to hundreds of ORT instructors and literally thousands of students, all of the Jewish DP's in the camps. It was a rare individual indeed who had not lost one or more members of his immediate family or who was not alive as a result of so amazing a series of narrow escapes as would comprise an unbelievable Hollywood scenario.

Their feelings of disappointment at the unconscionable delays which kept them in the camps month after month may best be expressed by an explanation given to me by Jacob Oleiski, until recently director of ORT schools in the United States zone of Germany who is himself a DP and who founded the school in Landsberg referred to by Kurt Grossman. He said:

"We who still survived in the camps as the liberation drew nearer felt that we were alive as a result of a miracle. We clung to life by a hair. Reduced to bones and skin, we lived in filth, starvation and terror. We prayed for the further advance of the American armies even while we knew that we might die prior to their arrival. Therefore for those of us who did manage to survive, our excitement, our joy and our expectations were unbounded. We felt we lived as the result of a special and divine dispensation by God. I cannot tell you what we expected the world to do for us. If I were to say it now it would sound silly, but you will understand that we took fully for granted that the governments of the world would vie with one another in their efforts to redeem the shame and horror of fascism. Our people learned with difficulty that such was not to be the case."

It is not my intention to overstress the human problem we in the United States must consider in our DP immigration policy. What I do urge is that the doors should be opened for the DP's so that they can go where they themselves wish, whether to Israel, the United States, or elsewhere. So far as we are concerned, I think it is demonstrable that this country would be enriched not only spiritually, but in strictly practical and material terms, by the immigration of as many Jewish DP's as might wish to come here.

The United States is at present operating under a full employment economy with marked labor shortages in many geographic and occupational areas. The latest survey of the occupational skills of Jewish DP's made by IRO shows that of a total of 84,000 Jewish DP's covered in the survey only 14,000 —6,000 men and 8,000 women— had no previous work experience. Almost 35,000 showed experience in skilled occupations, 7,000 in professional and managerial, 5,000 in clerical and sales, 4,000 in service occupations, 4,000 in extractive industries (agriculture, fishery, forestry, etc., with the remainder distributed among the semi-skilled, apprentice and labor categories.

Furthermore, in three and a half years during which World ORT Union has conducted vocational training courses in the DP camps in Germany, Austria and Italy, fully 9,000 students have completed their courses and obtained their diplomas in a great variety of skills. As of June 30, 1948, 9,707 students were enrolled in 670 courses in 104 training centers in these countries, and many thousands more have received partial training in basic manual skills prior to their emigration.

The mere fact that these thousands of DP's, in a complex of circumstances characterised by poor health, inadequate food and clothing and general despair, have striven for an education is the greatest possible testimonial to their determination, morals, courage and foresight. It is primarily because of their human qualities and their ability to make a real and solid contribution to our country that I believe that our new immigration law should be speedily amended to remove its discriminatory features.

CANADA FROM COAST TO COAST

Ottawa is dominated by dignifiedly handsome gothic structures that stand out like permanent sentinels on the summit of Parliament Hill. The visitor is attracted by its historical associations . . . its priceless collections of national documents and pictures . . . its internationally famed peace tower. He knows that Ottawa has seen, made and acted in historically vital events. In a mere whisper of time, she has matured to world-wide recognition as a city of beauty, dignity and international stature.

had betrothed. He could not fathom what game was being played, but he sensed that Aroun was being made the dupe of some plot. He began pacing up and down in a fever of alarm and indecision. His walking took him to the back of the crowd of onlookers and there he saw Shoshana. There could be no mistaking her, for she was lovely as she struggled to remain hidden and with her handkerchief pressed to her eyes.

There was much that Nuri did not understand, but one thing he knew he must do. He rushed forward to the Hazzan. "Stop, stop," he pleaded. "You must not continue with the service."

Instantly, there was uproar. Mar Katran's face was livid with indignation and he raised his heavy cane as if to strike Nuri. Aroun stepped forward and seized the cane. "Nuri is my friend," he said. "He does not interrupt us for nothing." And turning to Nuri, "What is the matter?" he asked.

"Aroun, Aroun, can't you see?—this girl, she is not the one you betrothed!"

Poor Aroun looked around bewildered. Mar Katran seized his chance.

"Are you prepared to swear that this is not the girl whom you betrothed?"

Aroun could swear to nothing of the sort. He had not the slightest recollection of the young woman of twelve months past.

"Aroun," Nuri cried, "can't you tell she's not the same? Look, she has thick ankles!"

Aroun was utterly shocked and there was general horror at the indelicacy.

"Wait, please wait," urged Nuri, and rushing to the back of the crowd, he seized Shoshana by the hand and dragged her forward. "This is the real girl, Aroun," he urged. "You must try hard to remember her."

Aroun moved across and stood by Shoshana's side and instantly the same feeling as once before throbbed through his body. He forced himself to look at her hand, delicate and white, with one faint vein showing through the smooth, clear skin. "This one is my betrothed," he said simply.

The rest of the story is soon told; how Beruchah developed hysterics until Nuri emptied a bucket of dirty water over her; how Mar Katran was severely lectured by the Rabbi and how he doubled Shoshana's dowry as a recompense; and how the ceremony continued with the right bride, so that Aroun and Shoshana lived happily ever after.

Everybody rejoiced exceedingly at the remarkable event and Nuri became the hero of the village. Two persons alone had rather different feelings. One, as you can readily imagine, was Beruchah, who immediately set out on a pilgrimage to the Holy Land out of pique, and decided to stay there, to the great happiness of her family. The other was the Rabbi, who was most concerned about the serious error that had nearly taken place and was perplexed to know how to avoid a repetition of such a scandal.

So he sent out letters to the great scholars of the country to come to discuss this most important matter. The Gaon himself came from Sura and the great Rabbi Iamgil from Pumbedita. The marvel of the age, Bar bar David, came from Mahuza and the head of the Academy travelled expressly from Nehardea. A special envoy from the Exilarch attended all the sessions and sent detailed reports to his illustrious master.

And finally it was solemnly decreed that:

"Forasmuch as Talmide Hahamin take so little notice of women, which is not the way of 'Amme Haaretz, be it decreed that no Talmid Haham shall henceforth go to his betrothal—unless he is accompanied by an 'Amme Haaretz."

Which is the law to the present day, as anyone shall see who takes the trouble to consult one of our great Codes. Because the law, once promulgated with such solemnity, never alters.

No, the law has not changed, but as for our Talmide Hahamin—ah, well, it's a wicked world!

This story is from the Jewish Monthly.

U.S. ZIONIST YOUTH HEAD WORKED IN CANADA

Rabbi Amram Prero was designated national director of the American Zionist Youth Commission, the co-ordinating agency for general Zionist youth activities, and will be responsible for over-all planning, guidance and coordination of Young Judaea, Intercollegiate Zionist Federation of America (IZFA), Masada and Junior Hadassah, as well as attracting unaffiliated youth.

Rabbi Prero served until recently as national director of Bnai Brith Youth Organizations. He is a native of Palestine, came to the United States at an early age, was educated at the University of Chicago, and ordained by the Hebrew Theological College. For a time, he served as Jewish liason at the Mayo Clinic at Rochester, Minnesota, and later occupied the pulpit in Lexington, Kentucky.

For some five years, Rabbi Prero was connected with Bnai Brith Hillel Foundations, first as director at the University of Florida. There he was elected president of the United Inter-Faith Religious Council, represented the college in the Southeastern War Training Program and was visiting Jewish chaplain in the Florida State Prison. In 1944 he launched the Hillel Foundation at the University of Manitoba in Winnipeg, Canada, and served as National Hillel Liaison, assisting in the organization of new Foundations on other major Canadian campuses. He was a weekly columnist for the Israelite Press; chairman of the Canadian Jewish Congress Youth Division, Western Canada; president, Canadian Friends of the Hebrew University, Winnipeg. He was designated a member of the Executive, Rabbinical Council of America and its Social Action Commission.

In 1946, Rabbi Prero was appointed Director of boys' work for the Bnai Brith Youth Organization and subsequently succeeded Dr. Abram L. Sachar as national director of that body. He is active in many Jewish organizations, serves as advisor on Religious Functionaries, United Service for New Americans; member of the Placement Committee of the Hebrew Theological College, as well as of the National Committee on Jewish Scouting.

stant challenge and its significance requires constant repetition.

The only kind of real learning is experiential learning. Ideas are not transferred from one mind to another through words alone. The mature mind utilizes ideas by applying them to experience. This is a difficult process even for trained minds. The child learns best through guided experience in the classroom. "What the child is to learn, he must first live." Thus, as has been said before, learning is the response of the total personality of the child to a given situation.

These principles of learning indicate an activity type of program. If learning is to have any lasting value, if it is to influence permanently the personality of the child, then that learning must be an experience into which the child enters whole-heartedly in a prolonged situation.

In summary, then, the teacher who looks at his job makes efforts to understand the child both as an emotional as well as a thinking human being, he is creative in his interpretation of the curriculum and sees it in terms of the child's understanding, and he guides the learning process by following sound principles of learning.

TURNING THE PAGES OF "Canada Unlimited"

In 1617, Canada's first farmer, Louis Hebert, used a scythe to reap his harvest. Working by hand, he could barely provide enough grain to supply his own family.

The pioneer farmer and his sons, with their one horse, worked long and hard to grow enough food for their own use.

In 1852, farmer Daniel Massey made the first mower in Canada. Later Alanson Harris designed the reaper. Their combined efforts in 1891 helped develop the wheatland of the West.

The introduction, in 1918, of the combine, made it possible to reap and thresh 25 acres a day. Now, one man with modern equipment can cut and thresh 50 acres a day.

It is Canadian people and Canadian machines that prove . . . there's room to grow in Canada Unlimited.

New U.P.A. Man Was Zionist Council Head

The election of Harry L. Shapiro, formerly executive director of the American Zionist Emergency Council, to the post of executive vice-chairman of the United Palestine Appeal, was announced by Herman L. Weisman, acting chairman of the Appeal.

Mr. Shapiro's election, Mr. Weisman said, "places the United Palestine Appeal in the position to move ahead in planning for the 1949 United Jewish Appeal campaign, of which the UPA and the Joint Distribution Committee are the major beneficiary agencies." He added:

"Only with American Jewry's undivided and maximum support can Israel accomplish the vast task of rehabilitating and resettling these newcomers into a dignified, productive framework. The slightest relaxation of our efforts for any reason can spell the difference between an effective resettlement program or a drastic curtailment of the mass movement to Israel."

In pointing out that migration to Israel had reached 11,800 in September and would increase considerably in November, Mr. Weisman said the appeal provides the American financial support for Israel's over-all program of resettlement and upbuilding. He paid tribute to Mr. Shapiro's fund-raising abilities.

Mr. Shapiro said he looked forward "to an association with the staffs of the United Palestine Appeal and the United Jewish Appeal, the members of their governing bodies and the tireless workers and contributors in the various communities throughout the nation, which, I am certain, will be marked by comradeship and close cooperation in meeting the challenge before me."

A veteran of World War I and a graduate of Ohio State University, Mr. Shapiro served as a regional field director of the Jewish Appeal from 1939 to December, 1943, and before that was with the New York campaign of the Joint Distribution Committee. He was named executive director of the American Zionist Emergency Council in 1944, and remained at that post until his present appointment.

A check for $5,000 was presented to the United Jewish Appeal by the Shomrim Society, Inc., composed of 1,500 Jewish members of the New York City Police Department. The donation brought to the society in the Appeal's 1948 campaign. Police Commissioner Arthur W. Wallander, honorary chairman of the governmental and civil service division of the Appeal, accepted the check from Police Chaplain Isidore Frank and Detective Joseph Sobel, president of the society. The presentation ceremony took place in the commissioner's office at Police Headquarters, where Mr. Wallander in turn handed the check to Louis Cohen, head of the civil service section of the Appeal.

A New Decalogue of Family Relations

Our friend, Dr. Abraham N. Franzblau, Dean of Hebrew Union Schools in New York City, formulated ten commandments to supplement the ancient decalogue of morality proclaimed on Mount Sinai. These commandments should be studied by parents. We are living in a most critical age when home life is being challenged and family altars lie broken. It is most important that a rediscovery be made of family comradeship and family reunion. For the home is the very basis of civilization and society. We are delighted to offer the decalogue to our readers:

1. Thou shalt love and respect thyself as a personality, that thy family and friends may respect thee and themselves as well.

2. Honor thy marriage and thy mate that thy home may be a bedrock of love and security beneath thy children's feet, and a shining beacon to thy friends and thy community.

3. Thou shalt not "play God" with thy family or thy friends, nor even with thyself, setting thyself up as omnipotent, omniscient, and infallible in thy household.

4. Thou shalt not judge people according to thine own pattern, nor try to make thy children over in thine own image, nor avenge upon them the sins of thine own father against thee.

5. Thou shalt give thyself, thy spouse, and thy children freedom to grow, but shalt exact responsible behaviour as its incorruptible price.

6. Thou shalt not enslave thy children through "smother-love", nor purchase subservience with money or with other goods, or even with sentiments.

7. Thou shalt not increase anxiety needlessly in thy house, in thy shop, or in thy community, nor permit tension over trivia to sour the daily bread of thy loved ones.

8. Thou shalt not loath thy wife, thy workers, thy children, or thyself, to achieve the impossible goal of perfection, but shalt patiently foster the goal of partial success day by day.

9. Thou shalt cultivate thy children's conscience as the flower and shield of life's truest values, but shalt free them progressively from the protective prohibitions which you have imposed in childhood so that these may not become the prisons of their maturity.

10. Thou shalt not covet the talents, the beauty, the marks, nor the possessions of thy neighbor's children, but shalt accept thine own child for what he is, and help him to be himself.

The Seventy-Fifth Anniversary Convention of Union of Congregations

The Union of American Hebrew Congregations, the oldest Union of Jewish Congregations on the North American continent, observed its seventy-fifth anniversary at its Assembly recently held in Boston. It was a great gathering of men and women representing their respective congregations identified with the Reform movement in Judaism.

One of the forward steps taken by this great religious body representing four hundred congregations was the resolve to establish the Union headquarters in New York City. For the past seventy-five years headquarters of the Union was in Cincinnati. And while Cincinnati has been a splendid home for progressive Judaism, the time has arrived for the Union offices to be located in the very stream of Jewish life in America, which happens to be in the East with New York City as the main centre. No one can deny that the city of New York with its large Jewish population will benefit the growth of Reform Judaism. No one can deny that the Jews of New York need the influence of the Union with its message of a progressive interpretation of the Jewish religious heritage.

A memorable address at the Convention was the one given by Dr. Rabbi Hillel Silver on the influence of the new Jewish State on Liberal Judaism. Certainly, the debate on Zionism is over and the Jewish State is a reality. American Jewry will benefit tremendously by the Jewish State and in turn the Jewish State is urgently in need of American Jewry's support and leadership. Israel, the Jewish State, has endowed the Jew with self-respect and a sense of security and whatever the Jew is destined to do in the future in arts and literature will reflect the new attitude of dignity and confidence which has come in Jewish life as a result of the establishment of Israel.

Dr. Silver sees Israel exercising a unifying and sustaining influence on Jewish life everywhere. And what is more, the attachment of Jews to Israel will in no way interfere with the duties and obligations of citizens of their respective countries. We were comforted and encouraged by the prediction which Rabbi Silver made regarding immigration into Palestine when he envisioned a Jewish population in Israel of two million or more by 1960. He maintained, and rightly so, that Jews will continue to live in the Diaspora as heretofore, and share immensely in their contributions to the respective lands wherein they happen to dwell.

The multitudes of Jewry in America and Canada who have no identification of the synagogue must be sought out and brought back within the precincts of the House of God. The organized Liberal religious forces can do much in cooperation with the Conservative and Orthodox organization to Judaize and religionize Jews who are unaffiliated and who have lost contact with the source-spring of Jewish life, namely, the synagogue.

That the World mission for Judaism proclaimed centuries ago by the Jewish prophets must be proclaimed anew by modern Jews, was the thought expressed by the Honorable Lily H. Montague, of London, England. She advocated a world-wide missionary program, even including Soviet Russia, to spread Liberal Judaism. She maintained that in many countries men and women are indifferent toward religion because they have no conception of a living faith which grows and succors. Our obligation to these men and women calling themselves Jews is clear. Jews belong to a religious community and must continue to serve humanity. Our God is also the God of every man and, therefore, we must continue our historic mission of witnessing to God and God's moral law and pursue peace and the establishment of peace in the world.

Those who were privileged to attend the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Union will wish to remember it as a convention of rededication and reconsecration to the Jewish heritage. All agree that what the world needs in this hour of crisis is more religion and more of moral discipline. Hence a great responsibility rests upon the organized religious forces of America, Jewish as well as Christian, to meet the challenge of this historic hour.

Judah Magnes, A Son Of The Prophets

The Christian Century, of Chicago, Ill., says:

One of the truly great men of our time died in New York. Judah L. Magnes was the president of the Hebrew University on Mount Scopus, just outside Jerusalem. He had been a professor at the Hebrew Union College in Cincinnati and rabbi of the famous Temple Emanu-El in New York. But it was not the eminence of his career that distinguished him; it was the depth of his spiritual insights and his unwavering devotion to truth.

Some press reports gave the impression that he was in New York to represent the Zionist case before the United Nations. Actually he was there because of his deep distrust of present Zionist policy and his determination to work to the last for a U.N. decision on Palestine that would provide for some sort of state in which Jews and Arabs could live together in peace.

If space permitted, there are innumerable things we would like to tell about Rabbi Magnes, all testifying to his spiritual greatness. As matters stand, we can do no more than point out that, in his insistence on the priority of the spiritual mission of Israel, and in his rejection of force as an agency for doing the will of God, he was in the line of the major prophets. Last year when the Hebrew University reopened (to close again when the fighting swept over Mount Scopus) we quoted from the convocation address in which he warned of the tragedy which was about to come on Israel because of its attempt to declare a moral moratorium until its enemies had been defeated.

Reading those words over again, one might be listening to a Jeremiah or an Isaiah. They help to explain why he died a virtual exile, and why so little attention was paid to his passing. They also explain why, in years far ahead, he will be revered as one of the shining exemplars of the pure faith of Judaism.

state of Israel. As loyal Americans, he added, they can have no part in the internal political affairs of Israel.

"What character will the strong emotional attachment to Zion, which the American Jewish masses have always had, assume in the future?" he asked. "Our plan furnishes the answer. The relationship will no longer be political, but religious and cultural."

UNION OF A.H.C.

located in almost the geological center of the United States, "is closer to the grass roots of America."

The recommendation that the union move to New York was based on the fact that more Jews throughout the United States made contacts in New York than in Cincinnati.

Rabbi Wise seconded the motion to bring the national headquarters to New York. He argued that such a move was in the interest of American Jewry and the settling of their problems.

"It is a challenge to the Union of American Hebrew Congregations to meet the pressing problems confronting American Jewry and New York is the proper place for the union's headquarters," he declared.

Col. Frederick F. Greenman, president of the New York Federation of Reform Synagogues and a vice-president of the union, said that New York welcomed the move, but had not urged it.

Dr. Heller said that he opposed the move because he felt that New York had no real Jewish community organization and that the union could serve best by remaining in Cincinnati.

Mrs. Sulzberger said that a more truly national perspective could be maintained by keeping the national headquarters of the organization in Cincinnati. "Let us realize," she said, "that our hope is our entire country; we must dig our feet into its soil; we must keep our roots here."

A series of resolutions calling for a strong United Nations, adoption of the Baruch energy control plan, endorsement of a progressive social action program and the revocation of the United Nations order that Israeli troops evacuate the Negeb, were adopted.

The resolution on Israel noted "with deep distress the action of the United Nations mediator in ordering the establishment of a vast no man's land in Negeb and in ordering the Israeli troops to evacuate from that region." It asked President Truman "to insist through our representatives at the United Nations that this order be withdrawn."

Inflation was deplored and the hope was expressed that remedies against it would speedily be found, and happiness was expressed "in the gains that labor has made in the past generation."

The Displaced Persons Act of 1948 was criticized as being "patently discriminatory." The new Congress was called upon to modify this law, "to restore to America the traditional policy toward the oppressed," and "to offer asylum to the worthy, ever remembering that it was of such groups, from the beginning of our history, that this great American democracy was formed."

The next meeting place is Los Angeles, Calif., in 1950.

who succeeded to the title in 1927, was educated at Eton and New College, Oxford.

A former chairmen of the board of trustees of the National Gallery, Lord Bearsted was a member of the board since 1947. He was a trustee of the Tate Gallery in 1938-42.

Last February he presented to the British nation his collection of paintings, together with Upton House in Warwickshire, his fifteenth-century mansion, in which the collection, one of the finest owned by an individual in Britain, was housed. Among the paintings were examples of Rembrandt, Rubens, Hogarth, Reynolds and Gainsborough, and Flemish, German and Italian primitives. The bequest also included valuable specimens of Sevres porcelain, eighteenth-century furniture and a fine set of Brussels tapestries.

Lord Bearsted served throughout the first World War, winning the Military Cross and mention in dispatches, and in the recent war, from 1939 to 1943, as a lieutenant and acting colonel on the Special List. He played an important role in the formation of the Council for German Jewry. His clubs were the Carlton, White's, Buck's and Beefsteak.

Besides his eldest son and his widow, he is survived by two other sons, Peter M. and Anthony G. Samuel, and a sister, Nellie, who is the wife of Basil Ionides, architect and interior decorator, who designed the interiors of the Savoy Theatre and Claridge's Restaurant in London.

de facto recognition by the United States, and the early success of the Israeli forces had a tremendous effect upon the morale of the Jewish displaced persons.

"It is safe to say," he wrote, "that the Jewish displaced persons were probably never in any higher spirits than they are today. They feel that the new state will survive despite all present difficulties, that Israel presents the only real hope for the mass resettlement, and are proud to identify themselves with this state."

Dr. Haber said that the Jewish displaced persons "ask nothing of the world except the opportunity to go somewhere where they can sink their roots and resume normal life." "By pursuing a policy that will permit emigration of Jewish displaced persons to continue," he said, "and by the liberation of our own immigration laws, it should be possible to so reduce the Jewish displaced persons population that there will be no need for any of their camps by 1950. . . ."

He praised the United States Army, the International Refugee Organization, and the voluntary agencies that have served them and said that it was to their credit that the Jewish displaced persons were in a good state of health and were emerging from their experience in a healthy state of mind.

SAYS HELP WILL BE NEEDED FOR YEARS

The post-war rehabilitation program of the American Joint Distribution Committee has aided some 300,000 European Jews, it was reported in Paris, France, to the international conference on Jewish relief and rehabilitation sponsored by the Committee.

In reporting this, Dr. Henry Sonnabend, of the South African delegation, warned that for years to come a large number of the Jews remaining in Europe or who have settled in many lands would require assistance.

Help has taken the form of financing credit and producers' co-operatives, vocational training and schools. Dr. Sonnabend placed special emphasis on the necessity for training Jewish youth on a high technical level to assure them a place in industries.

FAMOUS RABBI

Two SS men said: 'We have come for you.' By chance Rabbi Baeck had in his coat pocket the pages of a manuscript on religion. 'Toilet paper,' sneered one Storm Trooper to the other, 'let him take it with him.'" The manuscript was published in London this fall.

At the Theresienstadt concentration camp Dr. Baeck became a tower of strength to the Jews who were imprisoned there. When another German rabbi named Beck died in the camp, the word went out that Dr. Leo Baeck had died, and he was able to continue his work of ministering to the inmates of the camp as an anonymous number until Russian troops liberated Theresienstadt.

Dr. Liebman, in an article in the Atlantic Monthly, called him a saint.

"During the past months Rabbi Baeck has given me a new confidence that the human adventure will eventually go beyond tyranny, war and cruelty. Scarred by the worst that man can do to his fellow man, Baeck remains an undiscouraged, unbroken pioneer of the Divine Kingdom. A soul on fire, truly a contemporary of every great saint who has walked the earth, he can be for all of us, as he is to me, the antidote to pessimism and proof that man truly is created in the image and likeness of God."

Earlier this year Dr. Baeck made a tour of major Jewish centers in the United States under the auspices of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations in order to arouse the Jewish community to the need of a revitalized Judaism in the spirit of the founders of the Liberal Jewish movement.

During his last visit to the U. S., Dr. Baeck was the guest of President Truman in the White House. Honorary degrees were also conferred on him at the time by the Jewish Institute of Religion, the Jewish Theological Seminary, and the Hebrew Union College.

responsibilities, authorities added.

Summarized briefly the evidence put together by the Israelis presented the following picture of conditions in Arab countries:

Egypt—A large number of Jews were interned and under emergency laws all Jewish wealth and property valued at many millions of dollars was placed in Government "custody." All Jews working for organizations taken over by the Government were dismissed and prevented from obtaining other jobs, leaving many in "desperate" financial straits.

All Jewish homes "in the neighborhood of Government buildings and military zones" were requisitioned on forty-eight hours' notice and no alternative housing was provided. Mobs either officially encouraged or officially tolerated blew up Jewish homes or enterprises and in rioting during the week of July 17 alone nearly 100 Jews were killed and 500 were estimated to have been injured.

Property damage and confiscation and personal violence were accompanied by a new interpretation of the nationality law reversing the traditional definition that a resident is considered Egyptian until contrary proof has been offered.

Iraq — An unknown but large number of Jews were sentenced to from three years to life imprisonment on faked charges of Zionist activity. A Jewish newspaper in Baghdad was closed and all seven members of the editorial board were imprisoned. Jewish employees of business concerns were ordered to be dismissed.

Jewish members of Parliament and the Senate were excluded from some Parliament sessions . . . houses, synagogues, schools and stitutes were requisitioned. The included the Alliance Israelite Universelle, a French Jewish foundation.

One of the wealthiest Jewish communities of Iraqi Jews was forced to make financial compensation to the Government for loss of oil royalties.

Interfaith Medal Goes To Lehman

Former Governor Herbert H. Lehman said that the "cure of the cancer of discrimination, religious and racial hatreds" cannot be achieved by statutes alone. It must be done, he held, by willing personal acceptance of the concept of brotherhood.

He spoke at the annual dinner of the Garment Center Congregation and Community House at the Waldorf-Astoria, in New York, where he received the 1948 Gold Medal Award of Interfaith in Action in honor of "his achievements in fostering interfaith and interracial understanding." The presentation was made by David Sarnoff, president and chairman of the board of the Radio Corporation of America.

"We talk glibly of good will," Mr. Lehman said "and we give lip service to brotherhood of man. But frequently we do not implement these fine words. Brotherhood is not an abstraction. Brotherhood cannot be written into the laws. It is a concrete way of life. We must live brotherhood in our daily relations with others.

"It seems to me that the time has come when instead of merely talking about brotherhood we should take stock of what is happening and what each one of us is doing to implement our inspirational, but, I fear, sometimes meaningless, words."

The former Governor added, "We should question whether in our homes we are teaching our children by word and example that all people are equal in the sight of God and under the laws of our land, or are we by bad example or by indifference sowing in our children the seeds of intolerance which may stunt their moral lives.

"Are we in church and synagogue sincerely trying to correct the untruths and misconceptions that vilify and misinterpret other religious groups, and that foster the hatred and suspicion that people of such faith sometimes have for those of other faiths?

"Are we in our schools teaching our children that no one can be true to American ideals who does not treat his fellows with justice and good will? Are we making progress in teaching tolerance in our playgrounds and recreational centers so that boys and girls will play together in friendship, regardless of race, creed or color?

"Are we sincerely seeking to give all equal opportunities for employment and education? Are we trying to eliminate from our political life considerations of race, creed or color?

"If we are honest with ourselves," the former Governor added, "the answers to these questions will not always be pleasing."

ABC and HIGH STANDARDS GO TOGETHER

In qualifying for membership in the Audit Bureau of Circulations, publishers are doing more than providing advertisers with the facts about the circulations of their publications.

They are also giving active support to the principle that advertising space should be bought and sold only on the basis of verified information — a principle that has contributed in large measure to the interests of all advertisers.

In Canada, the Canadian Jewish Review is the only Jewish publication printed in any language reaching the Jewish community which is able to claim membership in the Audit Bureau of Circulations.
